the edict that they had to pay it, shouldn't it?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Right. They should be the ones who should have some methodology to see that the collection occurs.

SENATOR DIERKS: So the fault in my estimation is with the courts, not with...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And county attorneys and others who are given enforcement authority if a person is receiving aid. There are a multitude of ways and means by which people can be compelled to pay child support and those who are named in the statute to do it in some instances apparently simply are ignoring the law and their responsibilities, so the same thing could happen even under this bill where they might, you know, there may not be any greater collections. I just don't know. But if those who are sponsoring the bill would answer your questions, you could probably get more direct answers from them in connection with this bill.

SENATOR DIERKS: Well, I tried and I didn't get those answers. That's why I was asking you. I thought you probably knew as much about it as they did so.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well, I can't answer for the bill, you know, and I won't attempt to do that because I might misstate what their purposes are.

SENATOR DIERKS: Thank you. I still have difficulties with this piece of legislation because I think that the fault lays with the courts. Another license that Senator Chambers just talked about that does kind of touch home is that every, I think, rancher or farmer that uses any insecticides, especially the stronger ones, have to have a license...

PRESIDENT ROBAK: One minute.

SENATOR DIERKS: ...to even buy them. We have to use a license...we have to have a license to buy Roundup and some of those products we spread on our leafy spurge. I know that other than just spray pilots, ranchers and farmers have to do that,
